

Are you suffering from economic violence?

10 warning signs

Be alert if your partner:

Controls your spending and/or income

Forces you to account for your purchases

Uses money as a form of punishment when you argue

Has little or no information about your partner's income

Considers everything to be his because he earns more than you do

Considers everything to be his because you don't work outside the home and he does

Damages your belongings to humiliate you or make you feel bad

He disposes of your property without your consent

Does not allow you to have a credit card or checking account in your name

Forces you to borrow money from other people when you or your children need something

Recommendations:

- ✓ Have a current account in your name
- ✓ Be aware of your family's income and expenses
- ✓ Be financially independent
- ✓ Link your salary to your personal bank account
- ✓ Don't give your secret numbers and passwords for your accounts and cards to your partner
- ✓ Don't sign loans or guarantees without prior advice

How to advise women who are victims of economic violence?

At the first signs of economic abuse, provide these tips:

Take out 50% of balances from joint bank accounts

Change passwords to access banking information

Open a personal account if she doesn't already have one

Change the direct debit of your salary to a personal bank account if it is in the joint account

Ask for legal advice

Request or extract bank statements for the last year for accounts in which the woman is authorised and not the account holder

Be aware of the family's expenses and income

Do not sign any loan or guarantee guarantee any financial transaction without prior advice. prior advice

Revoke any power of attorney power of attorney, in cases where you have made such a power of attorney

